Increase your influence: Confidence, communication and management

The public sector hosts a unique set of challenges. To be a successful executive assistant, you must be able to overcome these obstacles for yourself and your executive. It can be particularly difficult to guide your executive and achieve influence without the advantage of seniority. Effective management upwards and laterally is a crucial part of your success and to become an invaluable asset to your manager, it is vital to master this skill.

This workshop will provide you with the skills and strategies to increase your influence, impact and resilience in your role. You will learn how to communicate with confidence and to manage up and across. Providing practical techniques to improve your emotional intelligence, communication skills and self-care, the workshop will help you create an action plan for enduring success.

Communicate with confidence

- Understand verbal and non-verbal communication
- Connect with others to seek and provide feedback
- Make your voice heard in all situations

Know yourself, boss and peers

- Build your emotional intelligence (self and others)
- Understand different behavioural, thinking and management preferences/styles
- Develop capacity for self-awareness and self-management

Manage your relationships

- Build and strengthen respectful and successful networks
- Align your interests and goals with others
- Embrace difference and diversity as strength

Impact and influence

- Understand qualities of effective influence and negotiation
- Manage drama and conflict
- Build capacity for self-care and resilience, to keep on keeping on

Expert Facilitator: Mark Butz Principal Futures by Design

Mark has diverse work experience, which includes more than 20 years in senior positions in government agencies. His agency experience is complemented by voluntary participation in the community sector governance. Mark has also been a consultant, facilitator, trainer and coach since 2002. Through these roles, he has developed sound perspectives on respectful and productive relationships, functioning as a cultural translator to bridge the gaps of understanding between people from different political, administrative, technical, scientific and community spheres. He has found this approach to be fundamental to unlocking the potential of teamwork and collaboration, to averting detrimental aspects of conflicts in values, styles, and ways of thinking.

Mark has been training others in communication, facilitation, leadership, and conflict transformation through more than 20 years across all States and Territories of Australia and in New Zealand, India and Nauru.

His work draws on principles learned as a practitioner of tai chi and mindfulness, along with a deep and enduring interest in ecology, social history and mythology.

Day One

9.00 - 4.30

Developing emotional intelligence to aid strategic communication during periods of high stress

Effective communication is key to managing conflict within a highly charged, emotional environment and as someone who deals with copious amounts of people on a daily basis it is imperative to understand alternative ways to communicate, to ensure relationships are navigated effectively. Having the capacity to be aware and in control of one's emotions, allows for greater ability to handle both professional and personal relationships empathetically and with greater practicality.

A significant body of research supports that a strong link exists between leadership effectiveness and Emotional Intelligence, and as the voice of your executive it is imperative to both develop and hone skills that will enable emotional resilience within high stress situations and difficult scenarios. This workshop's morning skills focus will equip you to:

- Determine how to stay in control of emotions during times of stress
- Gain the ability to respond to challenging situations and changing environments
- Understand different communication styles to best resolve conflict
- Establish strategic ways to manage stress both personally and professionally
- Discover the ability to assess and measure emotional intelligence in both yourself and others

Becoming a leader: Being in control of your career path

Developing the ability to think like a leader is an extremely useful skill to accelerate your career development, particularly when the aptitude to remain calm under pressure, whilst being able to manage your increasing workload is both a requirement and expectation in your role. Implementing strategies that allow you to conquer overwhelming tasks and demonstrate professional excellence, will aid you to achieve advancement in your career. From attending this workshop, attendees will be able to gain clarity on their career journey and how to advance within their current roles. Tools and techniques learnt from your attendance will ensure you exercise ownership of the executive support role, whilst leading by example through the ability to become a recognised and effective leader within your office. Achieve professional excellence by:

- Prioritising tasks to effectively manage your workload
- Increasing personal presence within the executive office and exemplifying role model behaviour
- Developing strategies allowing you to manage your work-life balance alongside an ever-increasing work load
- Establishing a leadership mind-set to accelerate your career development
- Creating strong professional relationships through gaining trust and credibility from others

Expert Facilitator: Melinda Varley Director and Principal Moxxie Business Services

Melinda Varley, the founder and principal of Moxxie Business Services and Moxxie Training Academy. She is a sought-after facilitator and trainer with more than 25 years' experience as a leader and manager in the public service, private and not-for-profit arenas. Melinda is a qualified trainer and developer, accountant and business coach with extensive experience in facilitation, business, human resource and financial management.

Melinda provides training and development in leadership and management, foundations of government, financial management and governance to Commonwealth and ACT Government organisations, employees and graduate programs.

Melinda has extensive experience in leading and managing teams through change in the public service, which has been recognised with multiple public service commendations.

Day Two

9.00 - 4.30

Keeping your composure: Strategies to develop resilience and overcome difficult scenarios

Along with managing broader stakeholder relations, tackling tough conversations can be one of the most challenging parts of an EA role. If not approached with the correct finesse, it can impact both yours and your manager's reputation. Having the capability to tackle awkward situations is often dependent on an individual's confidence and knowledge.

Often, being the voice of your leader means being responsible for their actions and decisions, whilst ensuring personal behaviour and relationship building skills do not negatively influence the organisation. Day Two's afternoon skills focus will explore different ways to maintain rapport with stakeholders and negotiate arduous situations pivotal to navigating your way to a positive outcome.

- Identify how to empathise whilst remaining in control of a situation
- Increase confidence to broach sensitive topics
- Explore communication strategies to address difficult conversations
- Determine different personalities and the ability to approach these with finesse
- Develop the ability to build rapport and maintain relationships
- Examine how to initiate sensitive conversations and effectively raise concerns
- Ascertain how to maintain composure during times of confrontation through emotional resilience
- You and your manager: Managing up and influencing with integrity

With the daily grind under control, executive assistants are able to step up as active participants in a number of complex working relationships. Improving your ability to effectively manage up is imperative to enabling your manager's productivity. Ensuring management decisions are made in a timely manner and communicated correctly are central to the job. The key challenge that commonly arises is an inability for an EA to impose any formal authority and influence upon senior executives. By dealing with a number of different stakeholders, executive assistants have the ability to influence a number of people on a daily basis. However, doing so with integrity is a different feat. Gaining trust, listening intently, responding quickly, persuading easily and feeling empathetically towards others are all ways to influence positively. Remaining authentic in nature when exercising such capabilities will ensure you remain an integral cog within the organisation, indispensable to your management team and peers.

- Building an authentic relationship with your manager
- Gaining full engagement from your executive during times of high pressure
- Recognising your individual brand, whilst ensuring you advocate your organisations
- Remaining authentic when faced with making difficult decision
- Understanding the traits of a holistic managers approach to leadership and how to implement such to your executive office
- Finding your own communication style to maximise your influence on key decisions
